

For Immediate Release

Community Based Care is Open for Business and Hiring Direct Support Professionals for Intellectual and/or Developmental Disabilities Services

In the midst of the current COVID-19 global pandemic, many companies are, unfortunately, having to lay off employees. Community Based Care (CBC), however, is still providing essential services to some of our most vulnerable citizens; those that have an intellectual and/or developmental disability. In addition, CBC is looking to find ways to support other provider agencies that are currently struggling with how to best serve the individuals we work with during this difficult time.

CBC President and CEO, Mike Kotzen, stated, "At CBC we offer a rewarding career opportunity at a time when stable employment is so important. We are looking to welcome dedicated and compassionate individuals to join our team, which helps the people we serve reach their fullest potential".

CBC is currently looking for part-time and full-time direct support professionals to help meet the needs of the individuals we serve. We are still able to get new employees hired and trained in a safe and responsible way. We offer competitive pay and benefits for full-time employees.

"We are looking for caring and responsible adults who want to make a difference. CBC provides stable employment and no experience is required", added Laura Fortier, CBC's Chief Human Resources Officer.

To apply now, simply visit our website: www.cbcare.com/careers.

About Community Based Care

The CBC family of providers supports people with Intellectual and/or Developmental Disabilities, and their families, in order to achieve their fullest potential, by matching them with the most talented, well-trained, compassionate caregivers anywhere. CBC serves over 1,500 clients in North Carolina and Florida and employs nearly 3,000 talented and committed caregivers. CBC providers offer state of the art training, benefits, 401k and electronic health records to best serve our employees and clients.

For more information on CBC, and its family of providers, please visit www.cbcare.com.